Did you know Fresno State mass communication and journalism students produce a weekly half-hour news magazine show that can be seen on cable television?

"Focus" incorporates news and features produced by students in two MCJ classes — electronic field production and news and public affairs — as the focus of their respective classes. The show, which airs only in the spring semester, usually packages eight news/features, two sports stories and one in-studio live show.

Now in its fourth year, "Focus" has won statewide awards at the CSU Media Arts Festival competition. "Focus" airs every Thursday at 10:00 p.m. on AT&T Broadband's Cable 14.
